"If Filipino is to be adopted as the medium of instruction, then let us do it the right way. Let us spend millions and millions getting all our textbooks, from kindergarten all the way up to graduate school, translated into Filipino. The translator, no doubt, would be at a loss on how to find Filipino equivalents for terms such as logarithms or nationalism. They will probably come up with translations such as logaritmos and nacionalismo, but can we blame them?" (Veritas, June 30, 1985.)

We wish to acknowledge the many sources from which these Filipino science terms had been derived. We are grateful to the Department of Education, the Institute of National Language, the National Library, the National Science Board, the authorities of the propagation of the language, as well as the many others who are keenly interested in enriching the Filipino language.
